The African Continental Free Trade Area (AfCFTA), formed in 2021, is bringing Africa together into a common market. While some things are bringing Africa together, wide diversities exist across the continent with existing trade blocks, cultures, and logistics corridors. Most importantly, the demographics of Africa, with an average age of 19 and population over 1.45 billion, is accompanied by cultural shifts that make doing business with younger people and companies very different from working with those formed and managed by their elder generations.
